1. Academic Affairs Update - Tom Boyd

The Handbook Committee meets for the last time this semester next Wednesday. By Handbook policy, changes will go out to campus for thirty days for public comment. A Department Head leadership meeting is scheduled for next Monday. The discussion will be related to the capital campaign and how departments fit in programmatically. The capital campaign is intimately tied to Mines at 150.

Boyd presented a draft Academic Affairs reorganization to Department Heads and is soliciting feedback. That same draft will be presented to the Senate Executive Committee. Once feedback from both groups is received the information will be provided more broadly to campus. Martin asked if this would affect the Provost search. It may guide the type of Provost the search committee is looking for. The search consultants are expecting to do airport interviews the first week of April and on campus interviews by the end of April.

10. Update from President's Council on Diversity, Inclusion, Access - Amy Landis

Landis gave a PowerPoint presentation on why this council was formed, where they are in the process, and what are the next steps. The Council was charged because Mines does not have a strategic plan for diversity, inclusion, and access. This is a big picture charge to include topics such as recruiting, enrollment, hiring, retention, graduation rates, and promotion and leadership opportunities for students, faculty, and staff. The first step is to make recommendations and draft a strategic plan for diversity, inclusion, and access. The goal is to create a climate which all can thrive academically and professionally. The Council has 5 teams each with eleven to sixteen members.
